WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

A low pressure system dropping southward into Southern California will bring breezy north winds across most of the north state today and tonight. A few light showers will be possible over the Northern Sierra and the Northern San Joaquin Valley this morning. The breezy north winds will bring relatively low humidity values today with minimum relative humidity values remaining in the teens mountain areas on Monday. Rebuilding high pressure will bring warming temperatures into mid-week. Lighter winds will allow slightly higher daytime humidity.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Cooler with higher humidity and a persistent onshore flow through Monday as low pressure develops over the region. Showers will develop today and become more numerous tonight, mainly over and west of the mountains, with accumulating snow above 5500 feet. Gusty southwest to west winds will accompany the precipitation over the mountains and into the deserts through Monday night. Fair, dry, and warmer on Tuesday.
